

History is rife with examples where some bright, new, up and coming product or service was bought out by a major corporation providing a similar product/service with the stated intent of using that newer, brighter product/service to enhance their primary product/service.

Then as soon as they retained ownership, they immediately shelved that newly acquired product/service, to keep their primary product/service out there and unthreatened by competition.

This could happen here.

I oppose all moves that would stifle the competition that VOOM is presenting to the other satellite providers.

I have VOOM, and as a professional provider of calibration services for high definition TVs around the country, have seen on display screens around the country all the other providers of HD. NONE come close to all that VOOM has been offering, since day one of their existence. And what VOOM offers in terms of new HD content continues to grow, week by week, month by month.

Please stop the gobbling up of a beautiful HD provider by anybody else. Please allow VOOM to stay sovereign and able to continue to remain here in all its glory, providing for us like nobody else ever has.

Robert Jones
Mr Bob on the Internet
Image Perfection